Do's and Don'ts on Addressing Mens Issues:

The term men's issues is less provocative than "men's rights." People often construe "men's rights" to mean rights superior to women's rights. NCFM believes in equal rights. When confronted with resistance you don't have to debate the difference. Be polite and simply inject the term "men's issues."

Don't talk about false accusations and sexual assault in the same conversation. Doing so creates an opportunity for you to be painted unsympathetic to rape victims or even supportive of the so-called "rape culture." All NCFM members are opposed to sexual assault and rape. It's idiocy to believe otherwise....

Identify as a member of the "human rights" organization National Coalition For Men that focuses on under addressed, ignored, and marginalized gender issues, especially as they apply to males.

Learn the NCFM mission statement, "NCFM is dedicated to the removal of gender based stereotypes, especially as they adversely impact men, their children, their families, and the women who love them."

Please feel free to contact your NCFM mentor with questions and suggestions.

HE SAID-SHE SAID...

SOMEONE HELP ME!
I DIDN'T DO IT!

As your group gains members, strength, and experience, you can more safely approach the more controversial areas with fewer pitfalls and hopefully less pushback.

Avoid using the word "feminist." Use the term "gender ideologue" instead. When you challenge feminism, pushback will come at you as women haters. Avoiding the use of the terms feminist and feminism will help to deflect some of the unfair criticism, minimize the pushback, and facilitate your efforts.

Rather than rights, focus on issues of male suicide, mental health, educational and employment disenfranchisement, reproductive rights, family courts, misandry in society, and other areas of legitimate concern. These issues are extremely important, and not near as volatile as men's rights, false accusations, or sexual assault.
